2. Copenhagen - Outcome

Participants demonstrated real commitment towards emission reductions world wide.

As expected there are still open questions with regard to the extent of the regulatory frame work.

- First time emerging economies made International ER commitments
- Significant financial commitment;
 - $30bn to 2012 for emission reduction in the least developed countries
 - $100bn/year by 2020
- Increased streamlining of CDM processes
 - More transparency, creating certainty around the process
 - Will come into effect 2nd half of 2010
- Agreement to establish a mechanism for emissions reductions from REDD

2. Copenhagen – Future development

Copenhagen was a step in a series of legislation, international and national, focused on subsidising cleaner energy measures

- Acceptance of international monitoring - eases potential cap and trade acceptance in the USA
- 2020 targets will be established and create more certainty around ER market
- Details of delivery mechanisms will need to be established
- Growth market in mitigation and adaptation projects as funds begin to flow
- Likely to be a form of cap and trade in emerging economies
